Program Description

Expedition Fellows is a competitive program unique to UW Tacoma. Designed for Freshmen and Sophomores, it provides an outstanding opportunity for a small group of academically motivated students, faculty and members of the community to explore a scholarly topic of mutual interest together in an international and/or intercultural setting. The actual time of travel is during spring break and therefore, does not impede on any other academic responsibility. Each year the program focuses on a different field of study offered by UW Tacoma. Upon completion of the program, students receive two academic credits.

The program fee includes:
- Academic course (2 credits)
- Roundtrip airfare
- Lodging
- Meals in-country
- In-country transportation
- Excursions: rentals, entrance & tour fees

The fee does not include:
- Costs for travel documents (i.e. passport)
- Study abroad insurance
- Meals/snacks in-transit
- Personal expenses

Eligibility
- Full-time enrollment at UW Tacoma
- Freshmen or Sophomore standing at time of application

Program Fee

As part of their commitment to the program, all Expedition Fellows are required to complete a project to promote international enrichment experiences at UW Tacoma and/or in the greater Tacoma community during the spring quarter. The goal of each project is to encourage participation in cross-cultural events, international education, study abroad, and other international enrichment experiences.

As UW Tacoma Expedition Fellows, students pay a fee of only $500. Thanks to generous support from UW Tacoma’s Chancellor’s Office and members of the Tacoma community, the Office of International Programs is able to offer a significant reduction in the cost of participation for students selected for the Expedition Fellows program. Though the actual program cost is much greater, participants pay only $500.
