For my internship, I developed a website for an organization known as the National Hispanic Chamber of Commerce on Health (NHCCH). I worked with my senior colleague, Sean Oh, in an iterative process to develop a website and then review changes with my client. I learned about the client development communication process, testing environment and final product environment. I implemented the jQuery framework to introduce combo classes. Using combo classes components I built new pages of a website. This was a huge learning experience for me, not only technically, but also in terms of getting my first real-world developer experience under my belt.
